

Increasing the number of media outlets a single person or corporation can own is contrary to the public good. It may be great for corporate profits but it allows a single person or corporation to control what opinions are expressed and to impose their opinions without answer in what is already a too large a number of permitted stations. Recent censorship from large media owners shows that this is not a remote possibility but is already happening. This is not in the public interest as required by federal law.